

Rodney Ghali

Acting Director General, Public Health Agency of Canada

Rodney is acting Director General of the Centre for Chronic Disease Prevention, Public Health Agency of Canada, where he is responsible for overseeing the Federal Government's policy and programs in the areas of healthy living and chronic disease prevention.

Prior to his current role, Rodney spent over ten years at Health Canada in various positions such as Senior Advisor to the Deputy Minister and Director of Strategic Policy. He has worked on numerous legislative / regulatory initiatives and health-related issues including: food and consumer product safety, reproductive technologies, aboriginal health, blood safety, and mental health.

Rodney holds a Master of Science (neurobiology) from McGill University and an Honours Bachelor of Science (genetics) from the University of Western Ontario.